Dear Valued Partner,

Given the recent merger announcement between Xerox and Affiliated Computer Services, Inc. ("ACS"), I wanted to take this opportunity to thank you for your past commitment to providing ACS with quality acquisition opportunities for evaluation. ACS has a long history of successfully pursuing acquisitions as a key component of its business model having acquired over 100 companies since its founding in 1988. We are confident that ACS is poised to continue that track record following the closing of the transaction which is currently expected in the first quarter of calendar 2010.

While many of you and your competitors have speculated that ACS will be out of the "deal game" for an extended period of time, I want to assure you that mergers and acquisitions will continue to be a key part of the strategic growth plan for the newly combined company. As such, I would ask that you continue to give ACS an opportunity to evaluate new opportunities. In return, we promise to quickly assess them and respond with our level of interest so that you may help your clients make the best decision regarding the opportunity of pursuing a transaction with ACS.

You may know Xerox's strong brand because of its successful printing and hardware business, but you may not know that its services expertise is just as strong, generating approximately $3.5 billion in annual revenues. Xerox leads the industry in managed print services (an area that ACS recently entered) and they have attractive assets in the mortgage and litigations support industries. We plan to continue to grow these as well as all of ACS' other vertical and horizontal services offerings ranging from ITO, HR, Healthcare, Customer Care, Transportation, State & Local, Federal, Transactional BPO and many others.

ACS will also leverage from Xerox's record of innovation and R&D investments, which will strengthen our suite of comprehensive business technology solutions; from the acceleration of ACS' global infrastructure and applications initiatives to automated and differentiated business processing services. In short, the combination of Xerox and ACS positions us uniquely and sets a new standard for technology and business processing solutions management.

I look forward to working with you on successful acquisitions in the near future.

Sincerely,

/s/ John H. Rexford

Corporate Development
